I'm realizing as I get older that self hosting is important because the powerful forget that tools exist when they fall out of favor and without the noise of the general public most tools become orders of magnitude more effective.

Self hosting in a broader sense of ideas as well. My favorite things to bring up in arguments are events that took place hundreds of years ago but still demonstrate that your argument is true. In many cases this is the only way to get someone to actually engage in an argument actively and critically instead of repeating a packaged argument.

That is great way to debate. It's unfortunate that most people are NPCs who don't know their history and can only repeat what the idiot box tells them. (It conveniently provides us prepackaged pro and con arguments that the powers that be have approved)

Jefferson would be disgusted. He hated the news media.

Technology

- irc
- torrents
- plaintext
- phone calls
- morse code
- decentralized fuel production
- analog control circuits
- hand tools (axes, sickles, scythes, hammers, chisels)

History

- trolling is not new (diogenes)
- empires always fall (any)
- race distinction by color is a social construct that began around 1500AD
- modern race segregation by color in academic anthropology began around 1850AD
- there were multiple competing systems of classification by race and some of them had white broken down into multiple races but none considered it more than a modeling technique (publicly) until then
- roughly 5% of the humans that have ever lived have done so in the last 70 years or are doing so now.
- assuming a continuation of population growth rates of the last 30 years (to correct for WW2) that percentage may hit 30 - 50%
- we've been building multistory buildings to some degree (4+) for almost 10,000 years
- we didn't figure out how romans made seawater tolerant concrete until 2017
- western empires seem to copy Alexander the Great's order of operations for conquering regions
- there are currently almost 20,000 satellites in orbit (ru = 6.3k, us = 6.2k, cn = 3.9k, fr = 500)
- there are 17 discrete members of the us intelligence community (at least)
- the us congress has a bunch of research librarian who answer pretty much any reasonable question they need answered (congressional research service) and you can access all the ones that are not classified for free on their website the day congress gets them then hear them cite what you just read incorrectly half the time
- there is no standard building code for most (any?) state much less the country and because of the cost to get a new building certified in all jurisdictions to accomplish the scale needed for production there are a large amount of materials that exist, have been tested, are better in many ways, but are not used
- communism and socialism are inherently not generative of progress and as a rule copy and repurpose systems and ideas that occur in free market economies. When isolated they shrivel because progress is necessary for all life
- simple automata can replicate any complex system
- we have neural networks, and have had for decades, that are sufficiently complex to "dream"

- mkultra happened and the cia destroyed almost all their trove of records then started a perpetual campaign to humanize evil

It was. Though it's roots go back to the ANSI and ASCII days, some of the art people made from simple 256 colour(8bit) pallets was pretty amazing.

Fun fact, in the early 90s, videocards got vertical and horizontal limit locks built in. Because you used to be able to give ANSI commands to tell a monitor to draw outside of it's range causing hardware damage.

Dipswitches, something nobody who has built a computer in the last 20 years has ever had to suffer through either. First soundcard I installed on a friend's computer was a soundblaster, and you had to set the gate and IRQ. You also had to lock the gate and IRQ for the ISA slot on the board.

Now it's all done through software, and even your most tech literate person today never has to do a thing.

The old bbs and early internet was so libertarian.

I had a really hard time accepting that while I wasn't paying attention, the entire online landscape had shifted to this communist/liberal nightmare.

Consolidation. We had the technical ability to create distributed solutions to market demand, but we didn't, and young startups that didn't mind being communist enablers got rich by siloing everyone's data and providing "free" services in exchange.

We also failed to protect the exclusively American concept of free speech absolutism when the web got easier and hordes of foreigners from countries that don't have such a concept started subtly influencing communities. (along with our own Karens that believe in safe spaces)

A lot of it started the day AOL people were allowed out of their "walled garden" and onto the ACTUAL Internet.

Lower the barrier to entry, and IQs and ethics drop.

Renegade, Roboterm, Lynx, Wildcat, PCboard, teleguard,. I was always a fan of renegade when I ran my BBS. Personal preference? Also, do you remember your FIDOnet address?

Those unfamiliar with FIDOnet, it was a slower method of messaging, but very much like email. Both private messages, and public messages/board. The benefit was, you could daisy chain from one BBS to another and let users communicate all over the world for nothing. The only real costs were with the NA/European links, though those became free once university computer clubs started using the early versions of the 'net to send 2-5MB message packets for free.

1hr for 1MB = $22(going 40km)...man long distance charges were ass back then.

Nice. Wasn't on FIDOnet until bunch of users wanted it and all the local sysops pitched in on a monthly cost for transiting the data. Think there were 10 or 12 boards in total with our little group at the time. Then one of the guys managed to get a working jumper node between our city, the next small town, to the next largest city so we could avoid LD costs.

One thing I do miss from the BBS days is LORD(Legend of the Red Dragon) and BRE(Barren Realms Elite) all hail the gooey kablooie and all that. Never could get into FRE though.

- Power is necessary to guard the powerless but is not a commodity to be pursued for its own sake.
- Original sin (literal or figurative) set us on our current path with irresistible momentum and the pursuit of knowledge provides the means to prevent us from guiding that momentum off a cliff.
- We don't know where we're going and never will but we have free will and it is necessary for us to exercise it in line with our morals otherwise we have no right to either free will or a claim to moral behavior.

And every other site had the 'under construction ' animated gif. All links tended to have spinning pixelated gifs. And search engines were very crappy, so when you found a good site, you'd go through the links it had at the bottom to similar sites and so on. To find the 'good' stuff. Kinda felt like treasure hunting.

I'm glad Tom sold it and made a fortune, honestly. It really did change everything.

Compared to facebook. It's like people forget:

Facebook was Mark Zuckerberg's attempt to get laid in college. You could only get in if you had an .edu email address. It was nothing but us college kids and it was used almost entirely for meeting girls.

But Mark being of royal blood, and attending a royal school, caught the attention of powerful faculty, and was eventually guided and groomed to create the massive data collection intelligence tool it is today.

READ THIS!!! Important!!!

If you are fat, old, tired, and 400 lbs, you need an escort during this protest. Antifa losers will be attracted to you since they're going to think you're an easy target. Start working out by walking around the block.

Also, any volunteers here ready to escort our colleague?

Stereotypes exist for a reason.

However it is that stereotype specifically that big tech seems to be bent on destroying. Women can code bigot, et al. This industry is target number one for liberal diversity policies.

I don't see any girls doing the super hard and annoying jobs like integrating undocumented and poorly crafted APIs. I'm nearly 50 and I was the youngest guy on an integration team.

I see a lot of "wymen" giving a lot of talks at a lot of conferences, and being a lot of project leads, and photos on websites. Yet their names seem to be absent from any of the open source software we use. Maybe 5-10% actual participation, but 90% of the representation. That is what social marxism does.

I know right? The “wymyn” al have the same look too - either business ladies bursting out of skinny jeans and a flowy blouse that’s prevented from exploding by some strained spanx OR rainbow brite haired genderless things

There are plenty of us that have nothing to lose at this point. Helping to make history is well worth whatever outcome may be inevitable for us...Fighting for this country and its future positive existence is all some of us have left to look forward to...Dont underestimate us fat old and tired ones we are the most dangerous.
